Karl Lutchmayer is equally renowned as a concert pianist and a lecturer. A Steinway artist, he performs across the globe and has performed at all the London concert halls. He has broadcast on BBC Television and Radio 3, All India Radio and Classic FM, and has lectured at institutions including the Juilliard School, the Manhattan School, and the University of Oxford. Karl studied at the Royal College of Music and undertook further studies at the Moscow Conservatoire and, for 15 years, was senior academic lecturer at Trinity College of Music. In 2017 he took a 1-year sabbatical from his lectureship in order to study for an MSt in Musicology at the University of Oxford, but the pleasures of being a mature student proved too beguiling and by Christmas 2017 he had resigned his academic position. An MPhil (research) degree followed, leading him inevitably (and largely unwittingly) to undertake a PhD at the University of Cambridge under the supervision of Prof. John Rink. Additionally, he leads music education projects and nurtures young musicians in India, his family home, for which work he was awarded the Bharat Gaurav (Pride of India) Lifetime Achievement award in 2015 and the Indians of the World Medal in June 2022.
